City of Industry Proclaims Month of May 2017 as Water Awareness Month Proclamation Comes on the Heels of Continued Calls throughout the State for Water Conservation Programs

City of Industry, CA – Noting the immense progress made throughout the state in combating California's historic drought, the city council voted at their last meeting to highlight the importance of continued conservation and proclaimed May 2017 as Water Awareness Month.

"Water is our most precious resource and although we may finally have this historic drought behind us, it is important to continue using water wisely and conserving for dry years," said Mayor Mark Radecki. "It's vital that we create a culture centered around conservation – one that encourages Californians to rethink their water usage, not just in times of drought."

The cyclical drought periods throughout California's history have taught the state the importance of conserving water for the sake of health, welfare and sustainability. As a part of this initiative, the City of Industry joins with many urban and agricultural water agencies from across the State in their ongoing efforts to make water conservation a way of life for all Californians.

Supplementing efforts for water conservation through this proclamation, the city council urges residents of the City of Industry and surrounding communities to join in this effort.
